WHY IT MATTERS

Good work deserves funding. This course helps you make the case that wins it.

Funding goes to those who can make a clear, credible case. You will learn a repeatable process for turning ideas into concept notes, proposals and budgets that funders trust.

THE REVIEWER'S MIND

How reviewers read your proposal

Your proposal is not read in a vacuum. It is read by a busy expert working through a pile of applications against a fixed set of criteria. Understanding how they read is half the battle, and you will learn to write for it.

1. Skim
   A few minutes per proposal. Clear structure and a sharp summary earn early goodwill.

2. Score
   Point by point against a fixed rubric. Each criterion must be easy to find and answer.

3. Compare
   Ranked against every other proposal. Small weaknesses decide close calls.

Reviewers decide quickly. Clarity earns their attention.

WHAT REVIEWERS REWARD

- Clear fit with the funder's priorities
- A real problem, backed by evidence
- A logical theory of change
- Realistic, well-justified budgets
- Measurable outcomes and a credible team
- Full compliance with the guidelines

WHAT COSTS YOU POINTS

- Vague aims and buzzwords
- Ignoring the funder's stated criteria
- Inflated claims with no evidence
- Padded or unexplained budgets
- A weak or missing evaluation plan
- Late, incomplete or off-template files

THE TAKEAWAY

Make every criterion easy to find, write for a skim-reader first, and never lose cheap points on compliance. You are not just writing a proposal, you are making a busy reviewer's decision easy.

THE REVIEWER'S MIND, CONTINUED

Write to the scorecard

Most funders score proposals against a rubric. When you know roughly how the points are shared, you know where to invest your effort. A typical weighting looks like this.

The lesson: spend most of your time on relevance and technical approach, make every criterion easy to find, and never lose easy points on compliance.

DESIGNING RESULTS

From activities to impact

Funders want a clear line from what you do to the change you create. That logic is the results chain, and it drives your logframe.

Inputs
What you invest

Activities
What you do

Outputs
What you produce

Impact
The lasting difference

THE LOGICAL FRAMEWORK (LOGFRAME) AT A GLANCE

	NARRATIVE SUMMARY	INDICATORS	VERIFICATION	ASSUMPTIONS
Goal	The long-term impact	Impact indicators	National data, evaluations	External factors hold
Outcome	The change you cause	Outcome indicators	Surveys, assessments	Outputs are used
Outputs	What you deliver	Output indicators	Activity records	Activities completed
Activities	What you do	Milestones, budget	Work plans, reports	Resources available

You will build a results chain and a logframe for your own project.

STRUCTURE

Anatomy of a winning proposal

A strong full proposal has eight parts that work together. You will draft each one.

01 Executive summary
The whole proposal in one page

02 Problem & needs
The need, backed by evidence

03 Goal & objectives
What success looks like

04 Theory of change
How change will happen

05 Activities & work plan
What you will do, and when

06 M&E framework
How you will measure results

07 Budget & narrative
What it costs, and why

08 Sustainability
What lasts after the grant

Concept note first

Many funders ask for a short concept note before a full proposal. You will learn to write a sharp two-page concept note that opens the door, then expand it into the full structure above.

THE BUDGET

Build budgets funders trust

A credible budget tells the same story as your narrative, in numbers. Here is how a typical project budget breaks down.

Personnel	35%
Programme activities	30%
Admin & overhead	13%
Equipment & supplies	12%
Monitoring & evaluation	10%

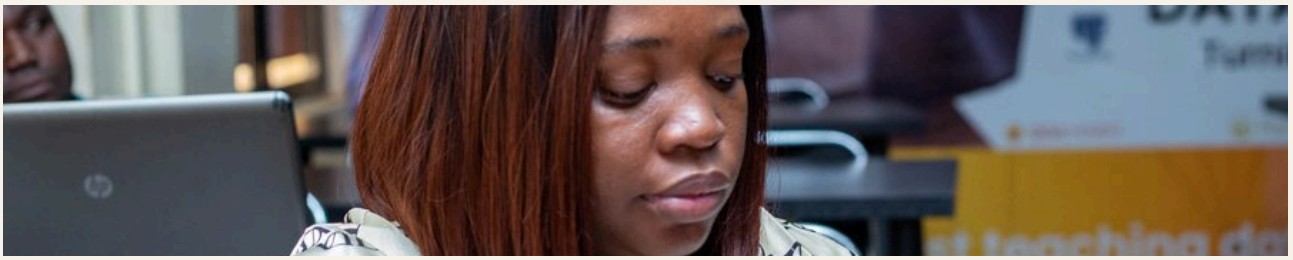

Illustrative split only. Every funder and project differs, and you will learn to tailor yours.

What makes a budget win

- Tie every cost to an activity in your work plan
- Write a narrative that justifies each line
- Keep overhead within the funder's allowed rate
- Show co-funding and value for money
